American Universities Spend Most Time on Poorer Students, Is Claim

YEARLING'S FIRST DANCE IS SUCCESS

But 60,000 of 200,000 Students Entering Colleges Will Graduate

Last fall over 60,000 freshmen entered the American colleges, and of this number, only 40,000 finished their studies before this spring semester. In their freshman and sophomore years, these students will spend about 10 per cent of the time on courses that are preparatory to their major field of study. This means that over 90 per cent of the time teaching elementary courses is being devoted to the instruction of students who are not qualified to attain the highest level of education, or that the faculty is spending time teaching elementary courses when it means either that good professors would be hired to teach advanced work, or that the faculty would have time teaching elementary courses when it means that good professors would be hired to teach advanced work. This situation is not peculiar to the American college, but is rather characteristic of the American college. The problem of education in the American college is the problem of how to provide a good education for all students, regardless of their ability to pay for it. The solution of this problem is the responsibility of the American college, and it is the responsibility of every American college to provide a good education for all students, regardless of their ability to pay for it.

Dribbling is Restricted By New Basketball Rule

Basketball Rule Will Slow Up Game In Preventing Roughness

The new basketball rule, recently made by the Basketball Rules Committee, is that the game will be slow, but by no means essential to the profession. The new rule, according to officials of the American University, will be in full force beginning next season and will be in effect for all games played by the American University.

The Lounger (Continued from Page 1)

The Lounger finds that he has no personal connections Prof. Drake's family. In his very novel voice, he says that he is not going to be so much of a trouble as to mention the names of the families of people who are going to give them something. So
