You have come to our portals stricken with ignorance, and it behooves us to give you proper instruction. We have received your votes and promises; the freshman rules in one hand and the rule book in the other. We hope you do not believe that you can enter your chosen course of study and enter on entering you pledged yourself to obey them. The rules have been purposely worded in a very childish and simple manner so that all freshmen may understand them. If you find that you have not been able to completely apprehend them. The first man to whom Technology owes so many of its innovations do not clutter the floors with cigarette butts, but instead the great amount of significance which
