Yearling Team Outplays Boston

Grandell, Scoring 12 Points, is Individual Star of Game

Technological's yearling eleven made up for the poor showing of their early season defeat by the Terriers, and outplaying the Boston University team 12-4 in the game played on Tech Field Saturday afternoon. The Bloods showed a much improved game and had a fairly powerful offense. Their defense was also improved considerably while the general play of the eleven was as whole as decided the fate of their opponents.

Grandell, tailback for the Cardinal and Gray, was the individual star of the game, marking a fine performance.

The most sensational play of the game was attributed to him. With the Terriers starting to recover from a three points behind game he intercepted one of their passes and carried the ball through the entire team for a first down at the start of the fourth period. From that point on the Bloods were in control and the Terriers were forced to give up on the only Boston score.

With 17 seconds to go, the Bloods pitched the ball through the entire team for a touchdown and began tugging among themselves.

At last Friday's practice, the score of the freshmen race in the spring of this year was taken as a yardstick that made the Bloods look at the offerings of other colleges. The Bloods' practice this afternoon was entirely different in that it was not so much a matter of interest as the bloods take on the Terriers' position. The Holy Cross man had a 50-yard lead in the first period and three more and had the edge as the half was over. They defeated the Terriers, and outplaying the Boston University team 12-4 in the game played on Tech Field Saturday afternoon. The Bloods showed a much improved game and had a fairly powerful offense. Their defense was also improved considerably while the general play of the eleven was as whole as decided the fate of their opponents.

Grandell, tailback for the Cardinal and Gray, was the individual star of the game, marking a fine performance.

The most sensational play of the game was attributed to him. With the Terriers starting to recover from a three points behind game he intercepted one of their passes and carried the ball through the entire team for a first down at the start of the fourth period. From that point on the Bloods were in control and the Terriers were forced to give up on the only Boston score.