Radio Station Is Being Built For Experimental Use

Communications Department
To Rush Work on New Shack Behind Coop

Work is progressing rapidly on the construction of the radio station being built on the Institute property at the rear of Massachusetts Avenue, in the basement of the Technology Building, to serve as the new shack of the Communications Department. This station will be equipped and operated in a few weeks, and then the present shack, in the basement of the Chemistry Building, will be torn down to make room for the new shack. This station will be used for experimental purposes.
