EXPLAINING OUR "TRIVIALITIES"

IN today's Open Forum Column we print a communication which is the type for which we have been waiting almost all of this volume last year. It is the only one that it would be policy to confine the majority of our editorials to subjects directly concerning Technology and its students. There are, however, a few paragraphs of articles and editorials from other colleges. In other words we recognize our position as a college news organ and attempt to stay within those limits.

We have often discussed the desirability of expanding our activities outside the world of books and politics and many times we have been greatly tempted to express our opinion that we are interested in other things outside of our college life.

If our vocation were college journalism we would certainly feel that we have stayed within the "cloistered" walls of the Institute, but realizing that this activity has definite limits and even then the result could only be second rate to that produced by commercial journalists.

We have expected long ago that there would be some criticism of our policy, because there are a number of students who are interested in other things outside of their college life.

If our vocation were college journalism we would certainly feel that we have stayed within the "cloistered" walls of the Institute, but realizing that this activity has definite limits and even then the result could only be second rate to that produced by commercial journalists.

We have expected long ago that there would be some criticism of our policy, because there are a number of students who are interested in other things outside of their college life. We have had this feeling inherited from our puritan ancestors that we should be shocked.

It is indeed as accomplishment when an author can make a character live in the way imaginary events and situations are always interesting and moving even without sliding into the category of character, make it well worth reading in spite of its minor defects.

H. T. G.