TO-MORROW afternoon the sixth and last session of the Studio will be held. The program for the afternoon consists of a debate on the question "Nationalism, Patriotism, Militarism," and "Free and Indifference to Religion" would then and only then disappear.

Men in the public eye to-day will be only too glad to exchange such a club. Similar organizations now exist at many colleges, whose sole purpose is to inquire into the external conditions of the college and to study the college youth. Their lack of religion brings to light the so-called "double standards" with religious standards, dismisses religion as old and out of date, and makes the point that the college youth differs from the non-college type only in having a sense of humor.

It seems that the General Manager of the Studio has also been as busy as a bee, and has sent out letters of invitation to all who may be interested in the work of the Studio. These letters have been received by almost everyone, and it is said that they were written by the same person.

The reason for this apparent indifference to religion is that many of the students are not interested in religion. They do not believe in it, and therefore they do not care to discuss it. This is not necessarily a bad thing, for religion is a personal matter, and it is up to each individual to make up his own mind about it.

Perhaps I am being too harsh in saying that religion is a personal matter. I believe that it is important to have a religion, but I also believe that it is important to have a common religion. Religion is a way of life, and it is important to have a religion that is consistent with the way of life of the people who believe in it.

The Studio has been doing a good job, and I hope that it will continue to do so. It is important to have a place where students can discuss the problems of the day, and where they can learn to think for themselves.
