Haines Expects Race With Navy To Be Very Close

Final Changes Made In Both Varsity andjayvee Boating

Haines takes the helm for the race with Navy this Saturday in Boston. The Varsity will start from Weeley Point and the jayvees will leave from the Long Island Sound. The boats will return after running the Cable Line course and the races will conclude the Boston season. The Harvard Beacon was not able to receive official word. The Varsity crew will race against the Navy crew from the University of Pennsylvania, the jayvees against the Navy's jayvee crew. The races are expected to conclude at approximately 10 a.m. and 11 a.m., respectively.

USC Tidings

So far the season has been relatively successful for the USC Tidings team. The team started off with a victory over the University of California on January 17, followed by a loss to the University of Washington on January 24. The team then went on to defeat the University of Oregon on February 1, and the University of Arizona on February 8. The team currently ranks third in the Pac-12 conference standings, behind Stanford and Caltech. The team's next scheduled game is against the University of Idaho on February 15 at home.

The Team

The USC Tidings team is made up of experienced rowers and has been preparing for the upcoming season. The team has been training hard in the off-season to improve its performance and to be ready for the challenges of the Pac-12 conference.

The main objective of the team is to improve its ranking and to win as many games as possible. The team members are committed to hard work and dedication, and they are confident in their ability to achieve their goals. The team has a strong coaching staff and a supportive fan base, which is essential for success in competitive rowing.

The team's next game is against the University of Idaho on February 15 at home. The game promises to be a tough one, but the team is ready to face the challenge and to emerge victorious.
