We saw Holbrook Blinn in "The Far Side of the Ring" just at the tail end of three months and, same as at the end of the first part, we came away with a warm praise on our lips for the performance. Blinn has found a theme, and the words of thanks Mr. Blinn gave to the actors for their efforts, pointed out the qualities with which the second part of the story may be as well as the first. At this point, the story is beginning to unfold with some degree of promise, and it promises to be as entertaining as the first part was.

Blinn's other efforts, "The Sign of the Greedy Pig" and "The Play's the Thing", are equally promising. "The Sign of the Greedy Pig", which was presented last spring, is a story of the life of a pig on a farm, and it is filled with humor and pathos. "The Play's the Thing" is a play about the life of a group of students at a college, and it is filled with pathos and humor.

In conclusion, what Tech Show undoubtedly needs is a sounder, more complete program of publicity. If this is not done, it will be difficult to present successfully. We shall be greatly interested in attending this second effort of Dean Fuller's proteges.
