FELINE'S DEPARTMENT STORE IS TO BE HELD IN THE BOSTON COLLEGE MEMORIAL INFIRMIARY YESTERDAY AFTERNOON

Dr. Emerson, in his dedication address, stressed the need for personal participation in protecting individual health.

The modern hospital is the expression of a new ambition, as a center of protection and information, a link in what has been considered a community of health, said Dr. Eames Emerson, Professor of Public Health at Columbia University, in his address at the dedication of the Richard M. C. Homberg Memorial Infirmary yesterday afternoon.

"The modern hospital is the expression of a new ambition, as a center of protection and information, a link in what has been considered a community of health," Dr. Eames Emerson, Professor of Public Health at Columbia University, in his address at the dedication of the Richard M. C. Homberg Memorial Infirmary yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Emerson concluded by saying that the new hospital was a pioneer in safeguarding the health of all, and that it was the result of the efforts of the various divisions of the building in which it was located.

Dr. G. W. M. Hyers, head of the Department of Hygiene and Medical Technology, said that the operation of the infirmary would be the operation of the infirmary in the various divisions of the building in which it was located.
