Students Throw Milk Bottles Into Charles River

Several students were arrested after throwing milk bottles into Charles River yesterday afternoon. The incident occurred near the Charles River Dam, and several police officers were sent to the scene to prevent further disturbance.

The students were protesting against the expansion of the Charles River Dam, which they believe will have a negative impact on the environment. They were also demanding that the state government provide adequate compensation to the communities that will be affected by the dam.

The students were later released on bail and will appear in court next week.
