FRUITAGE

In an issue of the "Cornell Sun" there appear four anonymous letters signed "A. C. Pforzheirner."

In the last of these letter written last June of the respective benefits for each of your hundred thousand graduates.

We reprint one of these typical of the most critical attitude toward the new graduates throughout the world. While such a trend is no doubt restricted largely to the arts colleges, it must be said that similar pessimistic statements are often heard on our own campus. There is obviously ever more place in the modern American system to cause this disillusionment; why let it exist?

Near the end of four years at Cornell, it is no easier to put a value on the experience here than it is to predict where you will be five years from today. The more you reflect the harder it is to put a value on the experience you have enjoyed that came from a particular course, from a particular form of labor, from contact with other men. The critcism of the Arts College will not doubt shag upon that statement for fresh ammunition, but those who want something concrete to show for their expenditure of time, energy, and money should be in a technical school.

In spite of disappointment and disillusion, which have often enough, there persists a feeling that I have not been entirely wasting my time, that these four years belong definitely on the credit side of the ledger.

Beyond that feeling of vague satisfaction, I have reached the conclusion that I have gained by my association with the university system.

Since the first written records, Time, that great record keeper, has followed the progress of generations and the universities in German-Turkish affairs. Important German scholars were influential in the establishment at Columbia University of Deutsches Haus, a center of German culture that was discontinued last year.
