Many of the great lessons of life can be learned through climbing the athletic ladder. It is in athletics that you learn the true meaning of cooperation. You learn that there is no such thing as just you and me, but there is only you and we. It is in athletics that you learn what it means to live up to your own picture. It is in athletics that you learn that it is not only better to win, but it is also better to lose for the right reason.

In sportsmanship you learn to be a courteous, well-mannered, and considerate person. You learn that in life, as in athletic competition, there are winners and losers. But the real winner is the person who, whether winning or losing, possesses that admired of all virtues—courage.

The track season has ended, and many of our students are returning from their vacation. Many of them have had a chance to relax, to think about their school. The season was a great success, and the team is looking forward to next year's season.
