For the first time in many years, I have been away from my home town to the north of me, and in the meantime I have been exposed to some of the finer things in life. I was pleasantly surprised to find that smoking tobacco is not as harmful as I had been led to believe. In fact, I found that it is quite beneficial to health.

The tobacco I used was of the finest grade, and it was carefully selected from the best fields. It was grown in the southwestern United States, where the climate is perfect for the growing of tobacco. The leaves were smooth and fragrant, and they had a pleasant taste. I was able to smoke for hours without experiencing any ill effects.

In conclusion, I must say that smoking tobacco is not as bad as I had been led to believe. It is a wholesome and satisfying habit, and it is one that I intend to continue in the future.

Yours truly
