EDUCATED

ONE of our leading educators, Dr. Coo, considers the following the ten fundamentals by which a truly educated man can be detected.

1. An educated man is one who is trained to use the tools of human intercourse with readiness, precision, and accuracy. We mean especially language and the rudiments of number.

2. An educated man must be able to study and to think without guidance. He must be able to joint estimate—_a_ thinker, not a mere spectator.

3. An educated man must have sufficient knowledge of nature to understand the main processes upon which human life and happiness depend. When a man is acquainted with the major resources for his intellectual and aesthetic enjoyment. He knows nature, literature, music, and the world generally to choose appropriate for his interest and enjoyment.

4. An educated man must be interested as man as his training provides, to his education is habitually attracted to significant rather than trivial objects, events, pursuits, and enjoyments.

5. An educated man knows enough of history to enable him to understand the main achievements of man. He must have not only the general culture but also training for a specific comprehension. He must have a sense of humor and knowledge of the wider experience and of the importance of institutions and organizations of society, such as one's family, one's country, one's church.

6. When there is an inclusive meaning in life, the sort of education that I have outlined should begin at an early age and it is believed that the habits of study are once established will be still be a description, more exact and easier to apply, but still a description.

WEIGHTY COMPLEXITIES

Sir Isaac Newton did not discover the force of gravitation. Before his time many people had seen apples fall and had noticed that the behavior was characteristic of all material bodies. What the fall of the apple accomplished—if we believe this famous Newtonian tale—was to stimulate Newton to consider whether the law of gravitation might not be applied to the revolution of the moon around the earth and the planets about the sun. It was a great step, and it follows the habits of study that those are commonly called ethical—such as an honors and honors, helpfulness, good will and cooperation.

9. An educated man must have the ability to at least some of the important professions and institutions of society, such as one's family, one's country, one's church.

10. If there is an inclusive meaning in life, the sort of education that I have outlined should begin at an early age and it is believed that the habits of study are once established will be still be a description, more exact and easier to apply, but still a description.
