Institute Uses Permanent Wall of Eight Men for Painting Buildings

Number Is Increased to Three During Summer

Keeping the three hundred fifty thousand square feet of walls and ceilings in the Institute buildings painted in a uniform color is an annual task of the Institute's painting force. This force, made up of eight men, has in recent years added to its annual task by painting the roof and ceiling of the entire building at one time. The addition of the ceiling job is made possible by the three men who together complete the job in a single night. The men are assisted in this work by the building's permanent force of painted walls. By following the painting in this way, the Institute has been able to complete the job in one continuous working day. Each Volume of the paper adds to the size of the Institute and the amount of work to be done by the painters. With every Volume there is more or less that causes a change in the Institute's appearance. This change is reflected in the number of rooms and rooms that must be repainted. The feasibility of electric lighting in the Institute has made it necessary for the painters to prepare a new scheme of colors and to plan for the painting of the entire building at the beginning of the year. The painters must cover the entire building every three or four years, and the work is done in the summer when students are not on campus and the buildings are empty. In the past the work was done in the spring, but this was found to be unsatisfactory because of the difficulty in obtaining the necessary labor. The new scheme of colors and the increased number of rooms to be painted have made it necessary to increase the number of painters from three to six.
