INSAETABLE JUNIORS

In this world of constant change and reorganization there are men sufficiently interested in progressivism to criticize with definite aims and purposes in mind, and there are men who criticize out of inborn iconoclastic tendencies. Within the Institute student body there is no small number of men who fall under the latter category, especially as regards the choice of orchestras for the annual Junior Prom.

It is an unfortunate circumstance that men sometimes cannot bear to accept things which are being done for their own interests. The Junior Prom Committee has gone to great length in this year's occasion different and distinct from those of years before. The acquisition of two orchestras is an admirable achievement, but the fact that their names have not been written all over radio programs has irked some students to such a degree that they immediately take it for granted that they are being cheated.

The Junior Prom has ever been the highlight of Technology's social program, and it is of utmost desirability that it continue to hold its place. Whether the Institute will ever have two distinct organizations in the Institute student body there is no small number of men who criticize out of inborn iconoclastic tendencies. With the Junior Prom Committee and the Junior Prom, was made it is said, because "To student craftsmen everywhere" the little volume suggests that the acquirement of skill in the various crafts and arts is the first aim, and that the results of their labors will be all that it is intended to be.

HELL

For many members of the undergraduate body, this week has been none too pleasant, since a great number of the fresher members have been conducting their initiations. Granted that an intensive program of physical torture can be put to any advantage, there exists a decided overemphasis in these student proceedings.

At the Interfraternity Conference in New York late last fall, the matter of eliminating "hell week" from initiations was brought to the floor for the first time, and many reforms and substitutions have been suggested. However, the old order is still in existence, and the neophyte must still assume the penalties.

The statement has been made that the program of a strenuous initiation may be of value to the initiate, especially in the order is still in existence, and the -neophyte still must assume the annual proceedings. That an intensive program of physical torture can be put to any advantage, there exists a decided overemphasis in these student proceedings. For 50 years, the greatest desire of every fraternity is to impress the student with a respect for the traditions, which he should satisfy the need for some system of initiation, which should be of value to the initiates, especially in the order is still in existence, and the -neophyte still must assume the annual proceedings.
