More Foreign Students at Institute Than at Any Other Technical School

Almost Half of all Foreign Engineering Students at Technology

What do foreign students come to do at the Institute? Once the primary reason was to study engineering, and more recently, to take advantage of an opportunity for socializing in an atmosphere where, as one speaker put it, "there are few native boys to do the jobs that don't depend on the language," it is now to be doubted that this is the principal reason for foreign students at the Institute. At any rate, it is to be doubted that this is the principal reason for foreign students at the Institute.

In the past, some American students might have been inclined to think of foreign students as a burden or an embarrassment, but this is no longer the case. Foreign students are now recognized as an important part of the Institute community, and their presence is welcomed by many.

The fact that foreign students are now recognized as an important part of the Institute community is evident in the way they are treated by other students and faculty. Foreign students are no longer viewed as outsiders, but rather as members of the Institute community.

In conclusion, foreign students are an important part of the Institute community, and their presence is welcomed by many. They contribute to the diversity of the Institute, and their presence is seen as a valuable addition to the Institute's educational experience.
