The Institute has always been noted for its policy of allowing the students to assume as much control of under graduate activities as possible. This fact is ably demonstrated by the democratic form of government existing at Tech, a student government that was revolutionary at the time of its founding and has served as the model for other organizations in addition to Tech's own. The President for the consideration of constructive criticism may well state that, in his opinion, the very high salaried positions are not a sufficient reward, but that there is a need to elevate the average far above the present level of income of the hearers as a whole. The average income of the earners as a
