Two schools: sixty bodies harbored, men and women, in the narrow engine room, the engines snarling as the fuel was fed into the furnace. The fire blazed with a ferocity that was almost unpleasant, and the air was thick with smoke and soot. The boiler room was a world apart from the rest of the ship, a world of noise and heat and chaos.

...and the engine room, where the men worked up the steam and kept the rest of the train behind.
