From Mrs. Thomas A. Edison the following personal message of sympathy:

NOTE OF SYMPATHY

To Family of Dr. Stratton, the following note was received from the President of the Institute all over the country and men prominent in the field of mechanics and science, expressing their sympathy. The message reads:

Mr. Charles T. Main '76, Mr. G. E. Halsey, and many other organizations. Indeed, few denied the esteem and friendship for the former Institute Head which were expressed at the services.

THE undergraduates of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have suffered an irreparable loss in the death of their esteemed Chairman and former President, Dr. Samuel Wesley Stratton. During his entire career at the Institute he showed an unfailing interest in the affairs of the student body, and his official responsibilities were too heavy for the business of his office to prevent him from receiving anyone of us who sought his help, advice or comfort.

A TRIBUTE

The undergraduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have suffered an irreparable loss in the death of their esteemed Chairman and former President, Dr. Samuel Wesley Stratton. During his entire career at the Institute he showed an unfailing interest in the affairs of the student body, and his official responsibilities were too heavy for the business of his office to prevent him from receiving anyone of us who sought his help, advice or comfort.

Because of his enthusiastic support and sympathetic cooperation, our Institute undergraduate organizations are stronger today than ever before, and our extra-curricular life was deeply enriched.

In his official capacity as President of the Institute he acted as friend and counselor to the undergraduates of the Institute, and many other organizations. Indeed, few denied the esteem and friendship for the former Institute Head which were expressed at the services.

I speak for the entire student body in expressing the sorrow that prevails throughout our ranks.

(Signed) DONALD B. GILMAN, President, Institute Committee of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Undergraduate Association.
