Founded Athletic Council

Major Briggs was the founder and first chairman of the Advisory Council, while he was in college. It was the general preceptor of the group. From his early days at the Institute until his death in April of last year had an interest in college athletics.

Although open sports are well indic- ated by the inscription. It made "right present and example," he instilled, developed, and exemplified those ideals of true sportsmanship which are the sound basis of American athletics with its mental vision, he conceived and advocated those ideals which today are developing and renewing the youth of this country.

Sports Originally Independent

In 1897 when Major Briggs undertook the establishment of this Advisory Council on Athletics, sports at Technology were being acted out independently by undergraduate class captains and managers. Financing athletics was difficult, and various teams were in debt for equipment and uniforms. It was then that Major Briggs proposed the Advisory Council on Athletics to aid in the management of these matters, to have a committee of students with today's vision, developing and renewing the youth of this country.

Responsible for Standardization, Policy Making

It is interesting to note that the policies laid down then for the standardization and rationalization of sports are still in existence today.

Responsibility for Standardization

It is true that the Lambda Alpha frater- nity and Phi Sigma Iota, which equipped and advanced such advancement, have been there from the beginning. It is interesting that the policies laid down then for the standardization of sports still exist today. The Lambda Alpha fraternity was formed in 1906, and Phi Sigma Iota in 1914.
