POLICE EXPECT FURTHER RIOTING IN DORMITORIES

Police of the Kendall Square station are momentarily expecting another dormitory riot like that which shook the metropolitan districts during the early morning hours of March 18, 1932 when the police riot squad was called out in an attempt to quell the rioters and arrived in time to find everyone in bed.

The riot, one of the worst in the history of the dormitories, spread to the campus and eventually turned everyone in bed. The attempt was met by the police riot squad, who cordoned the area and kept the rioters from causing further damage.

Newspaper Riot Which Followed Riot in Dormitories Last Year

The reinforcements from the local police department were able to keep them down. The rioters were prevented from entering the school property, thereby making it difficult for the local police to take action. The riot was considered quite a joke among the students.

Cement Mixture Starts Riot

Last year's riot was precipitated by the rumblings of a cement mixture, which had been started late Sunday afternoon, by two instrumental students. Calls to turn it off began to spread among the buildings, eventually turning into cries for "water," and the area surrounding the buildings became a veritable no-man's-land. Fire was soon started, the fire department was called out, and the riot grew to greater proportions, with all the students now united against the rioters.

This is the way the Boston Post carried the story in an extra edition the next morning:

"Shaping the worst riot in the history of the institution in years, more than 400 students, clad in pajamas and slippers, last night and early this morning ran away from the campus of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They set fire to the dormitories, fighting firemen who attempted to put out the fire, removing hose, and causing damage on the campus."

The story continued:

"The total damage done was estimated at several thousand dollars."

The riot was considered quite a joke among the students and the Boston populace. Despite the fear of the police, however, it is not believed the affair will be repeated this year.

"QUEEN'S HUSBAND" TICKETS ON SALE

Tickets for Dramashop's latest production, "The Queen's Husband," will be put on sale on Monday, March 18, 1932, at the T.C.A. office, or in Room 3-170.

The show will be presented in the Commons Room of Rogers on the days of April 7, 8, and 9.

SERVICE

To the Undergraduates, Faculty, Alumni is our constant watchword.

The Cafeteria, Grill, and Private Dining Rooms are run exclusively for this purpose.

We exist on your patronage.

We are your hosts this evening.

TECHNOLOGY DINING HALLS WALKER MEMORIAL