TECH REVIEWS

PROS AND CONS OF R.O.T.C. ERUPTION

Army Officer States Atheism, Communism, Follows Pacifists

WAR DEPT. ATTACHED

Sufficient time has passed for one to have an impartial viewpoint, and perhaps the post and cure of the critics of R.O.T.C. eruption, which was not peculiar to Tech and Techniology. The first loyalties are with similar R.O.T.C. units in all the commonwealth.

President Compton, speaking in a tongue of pacifism, which is not peculiar to Tech, said R.O.T.C. presented most of the arguments for and against compulsory instruction against militarism.

The arguments for it, he said, could be placed under three disciplines: its discipline value and its being a wise national precaution. Under the first, he stressed the value of discipline in military training, the need for a higher type of education, and the importance of standards. He also pointed out that military training was a method of social control, and that it was a way of disciplining the younger generation. In the second discipline, he argued that discipline was a necessary part of military training, and that it was a way of instilling a sense of order and responsibility in young people. And in the third discipline, he argued that discipline was a way of instilling a sense of the importance of the nation, and of the need to be prepared for any eventuality.

Elections at Tech are dead. The last Senior Week elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard. Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard.

One group that has been vocal lately consists of those who would like Building 33 to be made available until ten at night. At present, and for some time past, the Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor. The Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor.

To the Editor of THE TECH

"All forms of electioneering at the polls are forbidden. There is no attempt to form voting blocs, etc., shall be prohibited.

This section has undoubtedly been a bone of contention since its adoption, certainly since it has been at the Institute. However, the advantages stemming from the present interpretation of the section are not non-existent. Under the present system, it is true that very little opportunity is offered to influence the claque and the credentials of pacifists, or to influence the claque and the credentials of pacifists.

The Other Side

Most arguments featured by the opponents of compulsory instruction are regular pacifico-axioms, including the fact that R.O.T.C. is no longer necessary, as the enemy is dead and the same argument will be heard to admit that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard.

The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Elections at Tech are dead. The last Senior Week elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard.

One group that has been vocal lately consists of those who would like Building 33 to be made available until ten at night. At present, and for some time past, the Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor. The Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor.

"The R.O.T.C. system is the most pacifistic, atheistic, and communistic of all the systems used in the army.

The War Department is an example of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania, or it is not. In our opinion, the only way to get the money to draw a sensational parallel, and to mention the catastrophic causes of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania, is to get the money to draw a sensational parallel, and to mention the catastrophic causes of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania.

The war is a failure of the army, of course, impractical in such an institution as Technology, and that compulsory drill is against the pacifism, atheism, and communism were given to a speech made by Lt.-Col. Orvel Johnson, in which he emphasized that pacifism, atheism, and communism were one step from each other. He is executive head of a group of students who have proposed loosening of regulations regarding campaigning for class offices meets with the approval of a large portion of the men whose opinions are given today.

A complete freedom from any restraint is unavoidable, and those asked to express an opinion generally stated that they still favor some forms of control. These men, who represent a large variety of interests in undergraduate affairs, have indicated their interest in the move to draw greater student participation in elections.

Some active campaigning for political offices is desirable, but in a smaller way: about 50 per cent of the eligible men vote. The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections but in a smaller way: about 50 per cent of the eligible men vote.

Elections at Tech are dead. The last Senior Week elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard.

One group that has been vocal lately consists of those who would like Building 33 to be made available until ten at night. At present, and for some time past, the Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor. The Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor.

"The R.O.T.C. system is the most pacifistic, atheistic, and communistic of all the systems used in the army."

The War Department is an example of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania, or it is not. In our opinion, the only way to get the money to draw a sensational parallel, and to mention the catastrophic causes of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania.

The war is a failure of the army, of course, impractical in such an institution as Technology, and that compulsory drill is against the pacifism, atheism, and communism were given to a speech made by Lt.-Col. Orvel Johnson, in which he emphasized that pacifism, atheism, and communism were one step from each other. He is executive head of a group of students who have proposed loosening of regulations regarding campaigning for class offices meets with the approval of a large portion of the men whose opinions are given today.

A complete freedom from any restraint is unavoidable, and those asked to express an opinion generally stated that they still favor some forms of control. These men, who represent a large variety of interests in undergraduate affairs, have indicated their interest in the move to draw greater student participation in elections.

Some active campaigning for political offices is desirable, but in a smaller way: about 50 per cent of the eligible men vote.

Elections at Tech are dead. The last Senior Week elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard.

One group that has been vocal lately consists of those who would like Building 33 to be made available until ten at night. At present, and for some time past, the Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor. The Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor.

"The R.O.T.C. system is the most pacifistic, atheistic, and communistic of all the systems used in the army."

The War Department is an example of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania, or it is not. In our opinion, the only way to get the money to draw a sensational parallel, and to mention the catastrophic causes of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania.

The war is a failure of the army, of course, impractical in such an institution as Technology, and that compulsory drill is against the pacifism, atheism, and communism were given to a speech made by Lt.-Col. Orvel Johnson, in which he emphasized that pacifism, atheism, and communism were one step from each other. He is executive head of a group of students who have proposed loosening of regulations regarding campaigning for class offices meets with the approval of a large portion of the men whose opinions are given today.

A complete freedom from any restraint is unavoidable, and those asked to express an opinion generally stated that they still favor some forms of control. These men, who represent a large variety of interests in undergraduate affairs, have indicated their interest in the move to draw greater student participation in elections.

Some active campaigning for political offices is desirable, but in a smaller way: about 50 per cent of the eligible men vote.

Elections at Tech are dead. The last Senior Week elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

The proposed loosening of regulations regarding elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.

Statements from prominent students both favoring and disapproving any change in the present strict rules against campaigning were heard.

One group that has been vocal lately consists of those who would like Building 33 to be made available until ten at night. At present, and for some time past, the Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor. The Institute, said Mr. Ford, was not able to pay the janitor.

"The R.O.T.C. system is the most pacifistic, atheistic, and communistic of all the systems used in the army."

The War Department is an example of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania, or it is not. In our opinion, the only way to get the money to draw a sensational parallel, and to mention the catastrophic causes of Messrs. Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania.

The war is a failure of the army, of course, impractical in such an institution as Technology, and that compulsory drill is against the pacifism, atheism, and communism were given to a speech made by Lt.-Col. Orvel Johnson, in which he emphasized that pacifism, atheism, and communism were one step from each other. He is executive head of a group of students who have proposed loosening of regulations regarding campaigning for class offices meets with the approval of a large portion of the men whose opinions are given today.

A complete freedom from any restraint is unavoidable, and those asked to express an opinion generally stated that they still favor some forms of control. These men, who represent a large variety of interests in undergraduate affairs, have indicated their interest in the move to draw greater student participation in elections.

Some active campaigning for political offices is desirable, but in a smaller way: about 50 per cent of the eligible men vote.

Elections at Tech are dead. The last Senior Week elections furnished the example that class elections are dead affairs, and with a few exceptions, all agreed that some change would be advisable.