By some unexplained decision of fate, the "Irene" found its way to the College Theater yesterday, and the Dormitory patrons lost no time. For two hours, indeed, the stage was covered with students, and the program was a total success. The dormitory patrons were not pleased, however, and several of them expressed their displeasure by taking to the streets.

The dormitory patrons are not the only ones who have been displeased with the "Irene." The New York Times has already published an article criticizing the play, and the New York Herald Tribune has expressed its disapproval of the production. The Times calls the play "dull and uninteresting," while the Herald Tribune describes it as "boring and lifeless." The Boston Evening Transcript, on the other hand, has praised the play, calling it "entertaining and well-acted." The Transcript's reviewer, in fact, has gone so far as to say that the play is "the best produced play of the season."
