Sociology student won a decisive victory in the presidential straw vote held yesterday afternoon in conjunction with the political symposium sponsored by the Political Science Club. About a total of ninety-three votes which were not cast for the Socialist candidate, Herman Thomas, whereas the Demo- crats ran a poor last with only three votes, were tallied, and all the Socialist received and the Democrats received nineteenth and the Republicans no votes at all.

Four prominent speakers, each rep- resenting one of the four political parties, were featured in the emotional tête-à-têtes, outlining their respective platforms and political programs including prohibition, national defense, unemployment insurance, and defense, unemployment insurance, and defense.

In his remarks, Mr. McCormick, brother of the late Senator, advocated the necessity of establishing a Labor party. The audience was divided, but Mr. McCormick's arguments were strongly supported by the group to his right who declared that the Labor party was a necessary for the establishment of a Labor party.

Several students who were present yesterday at the vote reported that the mood of the campus was very critical of the entire situation. It is commonly understood that the students are not enthusiastic over the situation at present and are in general opposed to any form of government control, whether it be national or local.

Mr. McCormick, one of the prominent speakers, declared that the vote represented the expression of the students' will and if they intended to vote for the Labor party, they would vote for their own candidate and not for a political figurehead.

In his closing remarks, Mr. McCormick stated that the students are definitely conservative in their views and are not likely to change their opinions in the near future.

Mr. McCormick ended his address with the following words: "We are fighting for the future of this country, and we are fighting for our rights. We will not be satisfied until we have established a government that will represent the will of the people."

Mr. McCormick's address was followed by an address by a representative of the Socialist party, who declared that the Socialists were fighting for a government that would represent the will of the people and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the people.

The address was followed by an address by a representative of the Labor party, who declared that the Labor party was fighting for a government that would represent the interests of the working class and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the working class.

The addresses were followed by an address by a representative of the Republican party, who declared that the Republicans were fighting for a government that would represent the interests of the employers and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the employers.

The address was followed by an address by a representative of the Democratic party, who declared that the Democrats were fighting for a government that would represent the interests of the middle class and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the middle class.

The addresses were followed by an address by a representative of the Socialist party, who declared that the Socialists were fighting for a government that would represent the will of the people and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the people.

The address was followed by an address by a representative of the Labor party, who declared that the Labor party was fighting for a government that would represent the interests of the working class and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the working class.

The address was followed by an address by a representative of the Republican party, who declared that the Republicans were fighting for a government that would represent the interests of the employers and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the employers.

The address was followed by an address by a representative of the Democratic party, who declared that the Democrats were fighting for a government that would represent the interests of the middle class and that they were ready to do whatever was necessary to force the establishment of a government that would be representative of the middle class.