CALVIN COOLIDGE

As time passes, so must men pass; and even the great man does not escape. In his case, this is the final resting place and each must find in it the true estimate of him and his work. With the fact that Calvin Coolidge was a great president, and neither will they present the impression of the man that he was. He lived at a time when less of our modern leaders had ever seen before. Coolidge’s whole record is one of credit, with nothing to mar its perfection. And it is with regret that we mark his passing.

MAYBE, EH WHAT?

Believe it or not, as one of the popular newspaper features comes reasonably well. There are dormitories and fraternity men combined. There are more than 100000 young men, for we include all those whose term and home addresses are the same. They come daily from as close as Cambridge and as far as New Orleans and Providence. Between these two extremes are great numbers of men who come to Cambridge by trains, leave school when classes are finished, and return to classes again tomorrow.

We do not think the use of tobacco to have special importance. We recognize the bad habit and are not so much concerned with it. We do not see any advantage in having the same kind of habit that we have. We see no advantage in smoking for the sake of a habit.

OUR FORTUNATE CONSERVATION

Technology is indeed fortunate in having the financial system to support its activities as it is. While some schools have been forced to drop freshman games except in a few cases, we are able to continue our activities just as in previous years. Economies have been made in other departments, but a wholesome condition of affairs is not forced upon us.

The school is located in the midst of a large number of students who are taking in financial aid and funds. The financial aid and funds come from the school and from other sources. They are used to provide financial assistance to students who need it. They are also used to support the activities of the school.

THE TECH

The student newspaper of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, founded in 1884, is published weekly during the academic year. It is owned and operated by the students of MIT, and is supported by advertising revenue. The Tech covers news and events on campus, as well as local and national news, and provides a platform for student expression and debate. The Tech is known for its irreverent tone and its coverage of MIT’s unique culture and history. The Tech is available online and in print, and is a vital resource for the MIT community.
