COMMUTERS' ASSOCIATIONS

A LARGE part of a man's college education is making friends. This is no difficult task for those who live in the dormitories or in small apartments. There are hundreds of students who live in the dormitories in the outlying districts. It is those men who do not have automobiles who are the ones to whom the Commuters' Association is particularly necessary. The number of students who can attend lectures can be limited, and it is for these that Commuters' Association plans have been made.

It is to help the commuters in the matter of social contacts that the Commuters' Association is being planned. Several luncheon meetings are to be planned. On the plan may allow five students from each college to attend. The first meeting is to be announced for Thursday, when there will be a first production we ever saw. Of which, if we remember a right, we may say so. That's enough, according to the reading of a meter. If applied to a one gram mass, the j.

The TECH STRIKE BACK

THE hand of the National Council of the present financial crisis of the public school system is worthy of attention. The full picture of the modern American citizen is the social problem surrounding social stability, that educators must no longer be "neutral" in political matters, that teachers must oppose every attack on the system of free public education, and that unemployed youth should be encouraged to some educational agency instead of the War Department, the Council shows itself a militant organization ready to fight the rapid shut-down of schools if necessary. Changes in educational methods are instituted in public schools with great difficulty. It is in times of crises that we present, when shortages of funds make some kind of reorganization necessary that a forward thinking group of teachers and students must do to guide such modification of the system as may be necessary.

The plan proposed by Dr. Judi of the University of Iowa seems to be the one that is likely to be adopted. Twenty years ago, when the problem of achieving better contact with the public schools was one of the first steps taken in the modern education movement, there was a decided need for the establishment of a Commuters' Association and its luncheon meetings can help tremendously.

The TECH STRIKE BACK

The hand of the National Council of the present financial crisis of the public school system is worthy of attention. The full picture of the modern American citizen is the social problem surrounding social stability, that educators must no longer be "neutral" in political matters, that teachers must oppose every attack on the system of free public education, and that unemployed youth should be encouraged to some educational agency instead of the War Department, the Council shows itself a militant organization ready to fight the rapid shut-down of schools if necessary. Changes in educational methods are instituted in public schools with great difficulty. It is in times of crises that we present, when shortages of funds make some kind of reorganization necessary that a forward thinking group of teachers and students must do to guide such modification of the system as may be necessary.

The plan proposed by Dr. Judi of the University of Iowa seems to be the one that is likely to be adopted. Twenty years ago, when the problem of achieving better contact with the public schools was one of the first steps taken in the modern education movement, there was a decided need for the establishment of a Commuters' Association and its luncheon meetings can help tremendously.

The TECH STRIKE BACK

The hand of the National Council of the present financial crisis of the public school system is worthy of attention. The full picture of the modern American citizen is the social problem surrounding social stability, that educators must no longer be "neutral" in political matters, that teachers must oppose every attack on the system of free public education, and that unemployed youth should be encouraged to some educational agency instead of the War Department, the Council shows itself a militant organization ready to fight the rapid shut-down of schools if necessary. Changes in educational methods are instituted in public schools with great difficulty. It is in times of crises that we present, when shortages of funds make some kind of reorganization necessary that a forward thinking group of teachers and students must do to guide such modification of the system as may be necessary.

The plan proposed by Dr. Judi of the University of Iowa seems to be the one that is likely to be adopted. Twenty years ago, when the problem of achieving better contact with the public schools was one of the first steps taken in the modern education movement, there was a decided need for the establishment of a Commuters' Association and its luncheon meetings can help tremendously.

The TECH STRIKE BACK

The hand of the National Council of the present financial crisis of the public school system is worthy of attention. The full picture of the modern American citizen is the social problem surrounding social stability, that educators must no longer be "neutral" in political matters, that teachers must oppose every attack on the system of free public education, and that unemployed youth should be encouraged to some educational agency instead of the War Department, the Council shows itself a militant organization ready to fight the rapid shut-down of schools if necessary. Changes in educational methods are instituted in public schools with great difficulty. It is in times of crises that we present, when shortages of funds make some kind of reorganization necessary that a forward thinking group of teachers and students must do to guide such modification of the system as may be necessary.

The plan proposed by Dr. Judi of the University of Iowa seems to be the one that is likely to be adopted. Twenty years ago, when the problem of achieving better contact with the public schools was one of the first steps taken in the modern education movement, there was a decided need for the establishment of a Commuters' Association and its luncheon meetings can help tremendously.