Says He Did Not Suffer Hardships While a Captive
Sends Night in New Hampshire Woods; Walks Three Miles in Handcuffs

(Continued from Page 1) doctors on almost every conceivable topic.

Men to Learn Shackle

Although the first year men always say the hall and chain fastened to Brigs's ankle, he kept climbing with them that it was hard. He hoped thereby to have it loose enough to remove should he desire to escape. At first the freshmen would not listen to his pleas, but they finally relaxed and loosened the shackle to such an extent that it was possible for him to remove it from his ankle after removing his shoes. Briggs did not attempt to remove it, however, and forced the freshman to carry him the last few hundred yards before he walked alone, by refusing to move unless they did it.

More Prisoner to Dover

On Tuesday the freshmen decided to select Briggs to be in charge, and took him to a farmhouse in Darmouth, New Hampshire. By this time first year men had relaxed in their vigilance because Briggs was making no attempts to escape. The sophomore president watched carefully for any signs of his freedom. He described his break as

...