YOU CAN'T WIN

SINCE the earliest ages of mankind, there have been wars. History is but a long record of conflict; man has learned little from the bitter experience of the ages. The problems have not been solved, and the world is today as propped up with millions of bows and arrows as it was of northern Scythians. Man has merely changed his weapons as better ones have been discovered. The causes of war are, are, and will always be the same.

But what makes this statement particularly sad is the fact that the fatal causes of war are not recognized by the world at large. It is true that the people of nations all over the world are toeing the anti-war line as best they can. However, the war spirit of the ages has not been eradicated; it has simply changed its name from aggression or invasion to the more subtle guise of diplomacy.

This is the chief cause of the world situation today. The people of the world have not done enough to prevent war. They have merely changed their methods of aggression. Diplomacy is merely a more subtle form of aggression.

To win a war, one needs to understand the causes of war. To prevent war, one needs to understand the causes of war. The world has not done this. The world has not done enough to prevent war. The world has done too little to prevent war.

The world has not done enough to prevent war. The world has done too little to prevent war. The world has done too little to understand the causes of war. The world has done too little to prevent war.

But it is not too late. The world can still prevent war. It can still learn the causes of war. It can still learn how to prevent war. It can still learn how to live in peace.

The world can still learn the causes of war. The world can still learn how to prevent war. The world can still learn how to live in peace.
