The evolution of college student

THE EVOLUTION OF COLLEGE STUDENT

Among the many splendid changes that are taking place in the world today, the most significant of all is the evolution of a new type of college student. This development is most evident in the colleges, where we note a marked change in the attitudes of the younger generation. The old, rigid, formal college has been replaced by a more democratic and informal college, where the student is encouraged to think for himself and to express his own ideas. The result of this change is that the college student of today is more independent, more self-reliant, and more critical of the established order than ever before. The college student of the past was content to accept the ideas of his elders without question, but the college student of today is willing to challenge these ideas and to formulate his own views. This new type of college student is a true democrat, and he is dedicated to the principles of freedom and democracy. He is also a true scientist, for he is more interested in the facts of life than in the theories of the past. The college student of today is a true artist, for he is more interested in the beauty of life than in the rules of the past. The college student of today is a true citizen, for he is more interested in the good of the nation than in the good of the church. The college student of today is a true lover, for he is more interested in the beauty of love than in the rules of the past.
