THE TECH—Inquires

This column endeavors to answer student opinions upon selected questions. A reporter interviewee student at random, in making his remarks about the Institute. Questions for this column may be submitted by readers. Open Forum comments assigned to the number will be forwarded.

Today's question: "Every year the T. C. A.'s service in selling used books at reduced rates is a saving to the students, I believe that there should not be some small charge for the opportunity. A small charge and the prices paid for the book would still be less than the price of a new book at the Coop."

Question for next time: "Why do you think students should be charged a small amount for the use of the bookstore?"

Herald M. Mitchell, '38, X, 201 Oak St., Wakefield.

"Since the T. C. A.'s service is selling used books at reduced rates in saving to the students, I believe that there should not be some small charge for the opportunity. A small charge and the prices paid for the book would still be less than the price of a new book at the Coop."

"I feel that this department is well succeed in obtaining the book- store, and no more?"

Rutherford Harris '37, XVIc, 28 The Alden, Squam.

"Although I do not very frequently make use of the book store, I feel that this service is invaluable and it should not be charged any more."

"It seems reasonable. Why not let the student body try to raise some money for this service."

George H. Robinson, '36, X, 5 Crescent St., Wakefield, Mass.

"The convenience and value of this service is to the average individual well worth any small amount he may be taxed for its use. In an institution where time is literally worth gold, it would be rather exasperating for both purchasers and sellers of books to have to seek each other out individually."

"The one main objection is that the bookstore expenses are a part of the budget which the student body tries to cover with contributions. Therefore it should not be charged any more than any other T. C. A. service."

Burrender Harris, '37, XVIc, 28 The Parry, Boston.

"A small deduction from the amount paid to the seller (who also buy books at this saving) could hardly be begrudged. The difference between buying and selling price could help maintain this service."

James B. Scheppe, '37, XVI, 453 Andover St., Lowell, Mass.

"The T. C. A. stands for service to the undergraduates. Any such service as the book exchange is rendered willingly by the association in that it feels that this department is well worth the expenditure of 7% of its budget. I do not think that anything should be charged to the students for this service."

Benjamin R. Blocher, '36, V, 32 Allen St., Boston.

"I consider it just to have the students using the store share at least a part of the expense involved; provided, of course, that to by doing the original purpose of the exchange is not defeated, i.e., that this charge does not consume too great a part of the money to support the service."

Paul G. Burckhardt, '37, VI-A, 24 Hycroven St., Boston.

"Reasonable. Why not let there be a small price differential on the books sold — enough to cover charges, but no more?"

Allen V. Rebertz, '37, VI-A, Danvers.

"Although I do not very frequently make use of the book store, I feel that no charge should be made for the service. My contribution to the T. C. A. serves as a reimbursement for other services which I receive. There are undoubtedly those who take advantage of the book store, but not of other services. Their contributions are probably given with the belief that the store is a part of the service, and it would hardly be fair to charge them extra for it."

Miniature Houses

in the Southwest prior to the advent of the white man.

The architecture of early American homes is presented in a model which is characteristic of buildings about the beginning of the seventeenth century. A colonial American home, the Roeux of Parvenu, a miniature of which is included in the exhibition, may still be seen in many American cities.

The latest type of home, one which is designed in an international style, is shown in a striking model which indicates a recent trend in home building. Close by is a model a modern group housing project, a development of great current interest in view of the many housing problems now under construction or proposed.
