FORGOTTEN HOURS
PREPARATION FOR CLASSES

A CCORDING to the general catalogue, every student offered at the Institute has been rated with respect to the number of hours required to complete the courses of study which the average student is expected to spend in preparation for a term of study. It is not difficult to state the figures, a normal load of work is computed for each subject, and the hours and the schedule are so arranged that no student shall be required to carry more than about thirty five hours of work weekly. The catalogue does not mention the activities and possibly outside employment, such as work with the university or a laboratory, and this is a highly desirable one. Through this does it believe that his knowledge of the subject and his ability to project his knowledge to the time to his various pursuits with some definite means of predicting the demands to be made by his courses.

It is unfortunate, then, that in many institations a certain amount of work is given course is quite completely forgotten by instructors when making assignments. There are numerous courses where much less time is required than is called for by the catalogue’s requirements. It is not uncommon to find where an amount of work is consistently assigned which few if any students can possibly complete in the time allotted. Almost any student, if asked, could furnish examples from his own experience of courses where it has required perhaps twice as much as the supposed number of hours is an expected to spend in preparation for the course. The requirement of the course adequately. The requirements of the courses offered at the Institute are exemplary.

It would be too much to expect more than a few exceptions, and this is due to the length of actual assignments. Yet an error, that is, not in the wrong sense, but in the wrong way. The Institute has asked all students to make assignments in his courses and to report assignments correctly. It is well to note that the argument sometimes offered by instructors assigning more work than is required is that the students must up on some of the subject is general and as the rank of work in the length of his subjects in small comparison. When the student whose subject all seem to fall in the first category.

Often the difficulty is merely that the instructor to the extent of the amount of time his assignments actually take. In a commendable endeavor to correct this situation the head of the class of Biochemistry, Dr. and Mrs. Health, has asked all students taking any courses in his class to report assignments accurately. The amount of preparation actually required for the course is a great deal more than this many would give some amusing information to many a competent instructor.

C ERMANY’s recently announced determination to break off diplomatic relations with the Allied signatories of the Versailles Treaty, and to refrain from all payments and make claims against them, is a situation that had long been anticipated. The German military and economic situation is such that it is quite clear that Germany cannot meet the demands of the Allied powers.
