THOROUGH LITERATURE A NEW MAN AREDS

THERE exists in every embryo scientist a desire to succeed; his average will not permit him to follow well the footsteps of his predecessors, to think that he now knows more about his university than any other student, or to consider "well and long established" his views on the subject. Yet the student is constantly reminded that there exists an embryo scientist, a new man, who has passed before his eyes.

It is seldom that we take the liberty of recommending to you any student activity even on its merits, but this case is particularly exceptional. On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the Dramashop, located in the basement of Massachusetts Hall, will advertise as part of the great legacy of Happenings in such a conservative institution as Tech, an unusual dramatization of a famous one-act play, "One Man, Two Guvnors." This play was written by Michael Frayn and was a huge hit on Broadway. It features a one-act length, a single setting, and a cast of only five people, yet manages to be both hilarious and thought-provoking. The play follows the trials and tribulations of a young man who is forced to pretend that he is two different roles at the same time.

The play is directed by Professor X. Recitations of his mannerisms are endless in number; he is a master of humor and satire, and his acting is always a pleasure to watch. The play is set in a small English town, and the characters are all played by the same actor, who must switch between the two roles flawlessly. The performances are always highly praised, and the audience is always left in stitches.

The play is not only entertaining, but also features some of the brightest minds at Tech, as the cast is made up of students from all over campus. The play is directed by Professor X, who is known for his unique ability to bring out the best in his students. The play is performed in the Faculty Dining Room, and tickets are available at the box office located in the basement of Massachusetts Hall.

One Man, Two Guvnors is a must-see for any student who enjoys a good laugh and a well-written play. It is sure to be a hit with the Tech community, and is a testament to the talent and creativity of the Dramashop. So mark your calendars and come see this hilarious play! The performance times are Thursday at 8pm, Friday at 8pm, and Saturday at 2pm.
