DEATH OF A MAN AT ANCA

A man of unknown identity was killed as a result of an accident to the pneumatic drill at the Ancona works of the Metropolitan Opera House this morning. The man was working on the roof of the opera house when the accident occurred. He was taken to the Ancona hospital, where he died a few minutes later. The cause of death was asphyxiation.

The man was identified as Peter J. O'Connor, a foreman at the Ancona works. He had been employed at the works for ten years. He leaves a wife and two children. The funeral will be held at St. Patrick's Church tomorrow morning.

The body will be removed to Valley Memorial Park for burial.

John M. Tewey, the driver of the drill, was also injured in the accident. He was taken to the Ancona hospital, where he is in a critical condition.

The death is the second in a week at the Ancona works. Last week a man was killed when a piece of machinery fell on him.

The Ancona works is the largest of its kind in the United States, and employs a force of 1,200 men.

The Metropolitan Opera House is the largest in the world, and seats 3,500 persons.

The opera house is located on Broadway, between 44th and 45th Streets.

The body of the dead man will be taken to Valley Memorial Park for burial.

The case is now under investigation by the police.

The opera house is closed today, and the management announced that all performances will be postponed until further notice.

The opera house has been in operation for ten years, and is one of the most successful in the world.
