Professor Crosby Stricken by Death

Well Known Member Of English Department, Author On Napoleon

Associated Professor William Crosby, well known member of the English Department, died last week. He was forty-five years old. Death was attributed to heart failure.

Professor Crosby came to the Institute in 1914 as a graduate student in Architecture. He was an assistant in the English Department, from which position he rose to that of a full professor. Before coming to Harvard, he attended Williams College and Harvard. William Crosby received the degree of Master of Arts.

Besides his regular activities in the English Department, Professor Crosby was interested in a great number of clubs. He was an expert on the Life of Napoleon, devoting a large amount of his time to the study of the Napoleonic Period. For many years, he had been collecting rare models of the Napoleonic Wars.

The assistant, standing but a few inches in height, make a colorful addition to the orchestra leader and composer, will be given preference in the selling of the few remaining tickets.

After March 2 the price will be increased from 30 to 40 cents. There will be no reservations on the tickets.
