Admissions

The plan of admission under which the school graduating class remains unchanged, except that the requirements are to be increased to the following new requirements.

F. L. C. (Continued from Page 1)

Tuesday, April 7, 1936

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.

The general principle of my tariff is to restrict the importation of articles which domestic producers believe to be manufacturing at a higher rate than the domestic produce. This is the principle which, if strictly adhered to by the present government, would be a serious benefit in being forced to maintain an

The usefulness of a tariff is to make the country safe for its industries.