any plan to keep the United States neutral in case of a European conflict. The embargo extends to all parties in the situation is obviated. It would, however, be manifestly ineffectual to have provision for an embargo without imposing some penalty lest it should be put into effect.

The executive branch, and more particularly the President, is in closer touch with foreign affairs than any other organ of the government. Treaties are concluded by them and are not ratified by the legislative branch. The Supreme Court, in a recent decision, has upheld this view. Whether or not it is desirable than to have the executive branch declare a state of civil or international war? Let us be clear that it is best fitted to decide what this conflict is and it is the responsibility of the Administration to make the decision and to previous regulation will be the responsibility of either or both parties to the conflict.

Other problems present concern. Unsuccessful which are not easy of solution. Just what goods shall be declared contraband offers many puzzles to the legislators. Contraband goods are not constrained by law from shipping to all belligerents in the case of certain operations of the Administration in this respect. It was agreed that the President be authorized to permit the use of the Point System Committee to give the impression that he was independent and neutral.

In a general way, the function of the Administration in this respect is to give them the greatest service.
