THE TECH

THE TECH - Inquires

Questions: Do you think that the Corporation's action on raising the tu tion is justified?

Answer: It seems to me that the forte test way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incum fect students now registered here. When Not Dane wanted to augment their tuition several yea rs ago, they did not try to just to affect only the mem er of the incoming classes. These students were able ne the higher tuition into account, and thus were able e to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does ot place anyone in the awkward position of having pent two years at a university only to find it impos ible to continue because of the added financial bur den. Could this plan be used at Tech in the pres

The Ferret Again

Editor, The Tech: Well, it seems as if political chauvinism has started already, as evidenced by this little debate between Mr. G. Richard Young and The Ferret.

All campaigns have their real battles, but this bat ette especially annoyed me because of the surprised, holier-than-thou attitude which The Ferret took when his generously distributed derogatory remarks elicited a warm response from an opposition camp.

Of course The Ferret is entitled to his personal opinion, as in all Ms. "Young. But, Ferret, you made some statements as "some pretty petty politics" which were pulled by "a board of directors" of the 5th Club, mixed with boasts "which were never in that Walter town heaven" and "the controversial opinion of Mr. William McCua on the strength of a flimsy excuse" was "bald" and "I'll begin to think as if the freshman) Committee may soon have another probe on its hands." Then you invited to some delightful little statements concerning the Junior Prom. After doing all this in one column, Ferret, don't try to convince us in this class who have planned a budget for this tuition.

One thing is the statement that "Mr. G. Richard Young feels as I do about an authority on student affairs ... by signing his name to a letter in the editor last Tuesday." How would The Ferret have Mr. Young reply to his attack, by an anonymous letter? Probably Mr. Young feels as do about people who, while hurling political invective, ries anonymity to protect themselves, personally, from the effects of a reply on the part of the opponent. I shou that a Tech student would have intelectual en

tiety to enough stability for his personal opinion and not hide in the laws of an unseen column.

JOHN W. BECH, '40.

THE TECH

Tueesday, March 23, 1937

Reviews and Previews

METROPOLITAN - Opening

Thursday, "Wallabies Wedding" with BING CROSBY, MARLENE DIETRICH, Bob Bowen, and Shirley Ross is the feature hit at the Met. On the stage will be "Shaping Stars" starring the origi nal "Betty Boop", Max Quirtel.

NORTH MEMORIAL, held over for a second week. "Love in New York" with Regis Toomey, Tyrone Power, and Don Ameche and "Wings of the Mon tague" with Benny Fields and Jim McCormack follows Friday across the corner.

STATE AND ORPHANED-Another club holder of Boston this week is "Last of Mrs. Cheney" starring Jeanie Crain, William Powell, and Robert Montgomery and "Dangero nous Number" with Robert Young and Ann Sothern.

EXPERIENCE-For the last half of the week, Bruce Cabot and Margaret Linder in "Shiner Take All" and Jane Wyman and Anthony Mann in
"The Holy Terror" will be the fea tures.

DEACON-The ceremonial "Anthony Advances" with Olivia de Haviland and Fredric March comes again to State, beginning Thursday. Compa nions feature is "Alone Came Love" with Irene Hervey, James Stewart, Doris Kenyon, H. B. Warner and Irene Franklin.

Eastbrook to Speak
At Graduate Dinner

Robert Coates, President, Profa
dent and General Manager of the New York Telephone and Telegraph Compa ny will be the speaker at a din ner and reception given by the Grad uate Home Club, Thursday, March 24th in the North Hall of Walker
Dormitories.

NORMANDIE
Washington Street next to New York
Every Monday this week.

LENNIE
BAYTON
AND HIS ORCHESTRA
Popular Prices
Large Assortment of Pipes
-
Liquors in New England

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?

The income of security holders is certainly not greatly changed. This should be considered as a reason for not increasing the tuition of these at present...

It seems to me that the fairest way of raising the tuition would be to do it without letting the incoming students now registered here. When Notre Dame wanted to augment their tuition several years ago, they did not try to affect only the members of the incoming classes. These students were able to take the higher tuition into account, and thus were able to plan their expenses accordingly for their fees or five years. This plan seems more just as it does not place anyone in the awkward position of having spent two years at a university only to find it impossible to continue because of the added financial burden. Could this plan be used at Tech in the present case?