In September of 1928 the Institute School of Architecture is scheduled to move into its new $1,400,000 home on Massachusetts Avenue, as a part of the Institute's original plans for gradual expansion to keep pace with advances in science and engineering.

The new building was designed by Welles Bosworth, a member of the class of 1889, who was the first student to enter the entire Technology School when it was founded in 1884. Bosworth was as supervising architect in Mr. Harry J. Carlson of the Boston architectural firm of Coolidge & Carlson.

Construction of the new building at this time is made possible largely by the sale of the Institute's Building property in house, part of which has been purchased by the School of Architecture since construction in Cambridge in 1919. In addition to its importance as headquarters for the Institute's architectural courses, the new unit will permit reutilization of space in the older buildings, relieving congestion in various departments and assuring the most efficient utilization of the facilities for the best interests of students and faculty of the School.

The new home of the country's first school of architecture, one in the Department of Business Administration, will be in charge of each tent and cabin so as to help the new men in orienting themselves and understanding the organization of the Institute. Among the prominent guests are Dr. Kent F. Compton, President of the Institute, Harold E. Lobdell, Dean of Students, Thomas P. Pitts, Assistant Dean of Students, and Samuel C. Preston, Dean of Science.

A volunter service will be rendered by Dr. Baymont Merrill of the First Church of Newton, Bill Kitchen, Secretary of the Student Christian Movement, and Prescott are guests.
