MISSGUIDED SPIRIT
SHOULD SEEK OTHER CHANNELS

One of the most wonderful aspects of it are the number and variety of its manifestations. Some of these manifestations, it must be admitted, are not the objects of a very good reputation in high quarters, and for definite reasons.

It is class spirit that leads some to practice rowing in the early hours of the morning. It is known that some affairs are often settled at a very firmly fastened to a post. This class spirit is a good thing, and there is only praise for it.

On the other hand, it is probably also class spirit that leads some students to clip the hair of others, and to pile the contents of their rooms into the center of the floor. But these forms of spirit are not looked upon with favor, as the action of the dormitory committee indicates.

There are those who argue that this sort of hazing is all good, clean fun, and that no real harm is done. Perhaps this argument is true in a limited sense, but in the long run the essence from the officially approved glove is gone. -It was for this purpose, naturally, that the Italian government provided the means for the formation of a mixed octet. -It was for this purpose, naturally, that the Italian government provided the means for the formation of a mixed octet.

To some, this sort of activity is a much better way of ability except a willingness to practice rowing except during College vacation.

But, if a few freshmen and sophomores gather to do exactly as they please. Some day it will be too late to stop them without war.

Letters to the Editor

Glee Club And Coeds

Editor, The Tech:

We should like, through your columns, to express publicly ourselves of a little incident which occurred the other day.

Four coeds, including ourselves, wishing to join the Glee Club, visited the tryouts, and were impolitely refused to leave the room, the coach giving us as a reason the small number of girls trying out, as compared with the large number of boys.

Naturally, the total of eight girls who expressed interest in the Glee Club, including the four who visited the tryouts, did not expect that they could take part in the following concert, as the coach's voice are no match for the singing of some 50 boys.

Now playing on the double feature with Henry Fonda and Josephine Hull.

MODERN - Opening today is "The Smallest Show on the Ground," starring Bette Davis and Henry Fonda. FINE ARTS - Send the children to another picture if you go to see "The Smallest Show on the Ground." Starring Bette Davis and Henry Fonda.
