FUTURE CONGRESS
IT'S TIME WAS LARGELY WASTED

CONGRESS ended its special session this week without achieving a single objective. Its work was largely wasted due to the lack of necessary legislation. The session ended without any meaningful action, leaving the nation with a sense of frustration and disappointment.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE AND SCIENTISTS' BELIEFS

In connection with our recent editorials on science and religion, one of our readers has sent us a booklet pointing out the religious beliefs of five great scientists, Fabri, Faraday, Pasteur, Newton, and Kelvin, and has criticized us for having advocated the view that science and religion are inseparable. Our mistakes, he says, are obvious. The following portions of his letter are pertinent:

"...If the belief in an all-powerful God is not a part of every scientist's working hypothesis, there will be no science as we know it. For the scientist is a man of faith, and his faith is in reason, which is itself a form of faith..."
