Other Adventures Thrilling
Will's experiences with cowpunching are not the only adventures the present meteorology student has known. Indeed, they started in his days at Buckminster College, when he toured the world twice. Although he missed the '32 warfare in China, he explains smilingly, are plenty of activity in the Ghadani riots in Bombay.

These summers later, he joined the Rainbow Bridge Expedition as an archaeologist. The expedition spent several months mapping unknown temples and excavation ruins. A trip down the swift San Juan and Colorado Rivers was the most thrilling experience of the expedition. The trip was made with a collapsible boat in a river flanked for many miles by two other cliffs. Only a handful of supplies was lost coming through the rapids. Will hectored.

Beans Again
Here too beans were the main article of diet, with rice a close second. So rare are the other foods that Will tells of a time he refused a dollar for a piece of small cantaloupe which he was selling for himself on a two hundred mile trip. Two hundred miles of beans, he explains, amazingly, are enough to make any man offer a dollar for a piece of cantaloupe.

Still "Baring" To Go
All his experiences have not quieted George's restless spirit, however, for he is thinking of going in Alaska this summer, to pan gold. The only thing holding him back, he explains is that he is getting slightly tired of new beans and, too, sooner or later, "I'll just have to go to work."
