can more people be able to hear the better speakers, but more interesting speakers can be persuaded to talk to us.

Although it is desirable for people to have men from industry give lectures on what is happening other places than in a school, there are many professors who might do a great deal of good by devoting some of their time in giving lectures of general interest. There are a great number of interesting courses and original investigations that might be the subjects from which to draw short talks that would be helpful, not only from an educational standpoint, but also in that they might help new men make up their minds on courses for future study.

In the past, many interesting programs have been presented by various organizations, and it is unfortunate if an organization so closely tied with student interest as the Combined Professional Societies, can not take hold of the situation and supply interesting programs in the future.

CONCENTRATE

With trepidation and foreboding the first year men anxiously await their first college quiz on next Friday morning. Success or failure in their freshman year lies in the Institute tangible results of elementary instruction which is designed to improve their future attitude toward their professional studies at the Institute.

It is important in taking a quiz, whether a short test on a subject or one developed in a frame of mind conducive to easy concentration.

Often men who have a good command of a subject become quite nervous when confronted by a mimeographed sheet that asks seemingly treacherous questions. Often men enter an examination chamber with their minds overburdened with a hasty accumulation of facts. Most examination attempts to develop the student's ability toward constructive thinking. Hence, our thought is therefore the prime requisites.

Our advice, then, to you men about to face the first examination of your college career, is to become thoroughly familiar with the five dollar Ford as the Combined Professional Societies, can not take hold of the situation and supply interesting programs in the future.

B A G I N O B J O B

FOR THE EPS.

Last year when the question of the usefulness of the Combined Professional Societies came to the attention of the Institute Committee, we tried to help them in some way to find themselves. Now that the situation is helped by having a whole new frame of mind conducive to easy concentration.

Often men who have a good command of a subject become quite nervous when confronted by a mimeographed sheet that asks seemingly treacherous questions. Often men enter an examination chamber with their minds overburdened with a hasty accumulation of facts. Most examination attempts to develop the student's ability toward constructive thinking. Hence, our thought is therefore the prime requisite.

With trepidation and foreboding the first year men anxiously await their first college quiz on next Friday morning. Success or failure in their freshman year lies in the Institute tangible results of elementary instruction which is designed to improve their future attitude toward their professional studies at the Institute.

It is important in taking a quiz, whether a short test on a subject or one developed in a frame of mind conducive to easy concentration.

Often men who have a good command of a subject become quite nervous when confronted by a mimeographed sheet that asks seemingly treacherous questions. Often men enter an examination chamber with their minds overburdened with a hasty accumulation of facts. Most examination attempts to develop the student's ability toward constructive thinking. Hence, our thought is therefore the prime requisite.

Our advice, then, to you men about to face the first examination of your college career, is to become thoroughly familiar with the five dollar Ford as the Combined Professional Societies, can not take hold of the situation and supply interesting programs in the future.