COMMON SENSE

A statement made recently in these columns—that if this country does not wish to fight, we will not fight nor will we be fought upon—has been misunderstood. It is the expression of a sentiment of cowardice.

The expression referred to above does not indicate any cowardice. It is just plain common sense. There is no nation in the world at present that possesses the ability, the power or the accomplishment successfully to invade this country, nor does there seem much probability that an attack or an invasion will be a danger for years to come, if it ever will be.

Nor should there be any implications of cowardice in our calm, wise understanding American National Policy for Good. For: we may ship goods to Europe if we are prepared and willing to fight for that purely intellectual for that worker.

For we may ship goods to Europe if we are preparing ourselves into a position where we will have no right to howl when they are imported. But we have no kick coming if we assume that the two mistakes were made—it is not yet too late to correct them.

The results of the Junior Prom Committee election, with admittedly capable men chosen, and with intellectual courtesy.

The expression referred to above does not indicate any cowardice. It is just plain common sense. There is no nation in the world at present that possesses the ability, the power or the accomplishment successfully to invade this country, nor does there seem much probability that an attack or an invasion will be a danger for years to come, if it ever will be.

Nor should there be any implications of cowardice in our calm, wise understanding American National Policy for Good. For: we may ship goods to Europe if we are prepared and willing to fight for that purely intellectual for that worker.

For we may ship goods to Europe if we are preparing ourselves into a position where we will have no right to howl when they are imported. But we have no kick coming if we assume that the two mistakes were made—it is not yet too late to correct them.

The results of the Junior Prom Committee election, with admittedly capable men chosen, and with intellectual courtesy.

THE TECH

Editor of THE TECH:

The results of the Junior Prom Committee election, with admittedly capable men chosen, and with intellectual courtesy.

The expression referred to above does not indicate any cowardice. It is just plain common sense. There is no nation in the world at present that possesses the ability, the power or the accomplishment successfully to invade this country, nor does there seem much probability that an attack or an invasion will be a danger for years to come, if it ever will be.

Nor should there be any implications of cowardice in our calm, wise understanding American National Policy for Good. For: we may ship goods to Europe if we are prepared and willing to fight for that purely intellectual for that worker.

For we may ship goods to Europe if we are preparing ourselves into a position where we will have no right to howl when they are imported. But we have no kick coming if we assume that the two mistakes were made—it is not yet too late to correct them.

The results of the Junior Prom Committee election, with admittedly capable men chosen, and with intellectual courtesy.

THE TECH

Editor of THE TECH:

The results of the Junior Prom Committee election, with admittedly capable men chosen, and with intellectual courtesy.