The Walker Memorial Dining Service in operation as a strictly competitive canteen has lost its way. First, the rate at which serving personnel go out exceeds the rate at which students enter. The guaranteed clientele consists of many of the dormitory residents. If these steady patrons should decide they of their own accord that Walker would be forced to compete with real restaurants and cafeterias, a drastic and immediate reorganization soon would be brought about.

Correcting the situation seems to be difficult. A customer service is a usual cause for improving conditions in a restaurant, doesn't seem to work. An investigation by the Institute Committee only brings perusal satisfaction—enough, evidently, to quiet the complainers for a time.

A new committee, appointed by the Institute Committee, however, might get the situation under control. Each of its members is a representative of a local restaurant, and can surely judge when it is a success or a failure to swing the dam, in due measure, to get the attention of the students as the situation is set.

USELESSNESS

The approach of the time for class elections brings students naturally to the consideration of the various class offices and possible candidates for them.

Under the present system of undergraduate election rules, the two men of the presidential field receiving the greatest number of votes are elected president and vice-president. Thereafter, the president has a thousand things to do, to see the vice-president. The latter, just as good a man passionately qualified as the president, must sink into oblivion.

This system should be altered. The vice-president should be given something to do which will justify his qualifications, such as to do with skill. An Institute Committee job ought to do the trick.

The Walker Memorial Dining Service in operation as a strictly competitive canteen has lost its way. First, the rate at which serving personnel go out exceeds the rate at which students enter. The guaranteed clientele consists of many of the dormitory residents. If these steady patrons should decide they of their own accord that Walker would be forced to compete with real restaurants and cafeterias, a drastic and immediate reorganization soon would be brought about.

Correcting the situation seems to be difficult. A customer service is a usual cause for improving conditions in a restaurant, doesn't seem to work. An investigation by the Institute Committee only brings perusal satisfaction—enough, evidently, to quiet the complainers for a time.

A new committee, appointed by the Institute Committee, however, might get the situation under control. Each of its members is a representative of a local restaurant, and can surely judge when it is a success or a failure to swing the dam, in due measure, to get the attention of the students as the situation is set.

USELESSNESS

The approach of the time for class elections brings students naturally to the consideration of the various class offices and possible candidates for them.

Under the present system of undergraduate election rules, the two men of the presidential field receiving the greatest number of votes are elected president and vice-president. Thereafter, the president has a thousand things to do, to see the vice-president. The latter, just as good a man passionately qualified as the president, must sink into oblivion.

This system should be altered. The vice-president should be given something to do which will justify his qualifications, such as to do with skill. An Institute Committee job ought to do the trick.