Innocent (?) Sneezing Caught

Red Handed

To most people a sneeze is nothing more than an incovenience, with a... and ends with chat with... To Professor Marshall B. Helfand is the sneeze the source of both a mystery and a solution. In his lab, this professor has discovered that sneezing is a way for the body to expel droplets of fluid, which may include pollutants. The reason? To protect itself from external threats.

Photography Studies

This study also indicates that ordinary photography can capture the entire sneezing process. These images clearly show that the sneezer's mouth is open to the entire sneeze, allowing for the expulsion of droplets. This finding adds to the growing evidence that sneezing is a way for the body to expel pathogens.
