A LIGHT HAS GONE OUT

A great light went out of Technology's life last Tuesday night with the death of Professor Robert E. Rogers, a light that had been a guiding one in the lives of many students.

Professor Rogers had a great influence on students as well as on the faculty. He was a constant inspiration, and his death is an irreparable loss. In that loss the student body has lost a master, he was universally admired. He liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot.

To students interested in literature or in journalism he was a constant inspiration, and his death is an irreparable loss. However, although 63.5% of the students do not want to help Britain with more than cash purchases or non-war materials.

The student opinion might be summed up by the ballot of one student. "The foreign policy should be to pound hell out of Britain; then hell out of Singapore and establish democracies all over the world and keep them that way. We should send Roosevelt to the front lines also, as well as many others."

A MASCOT WE MUST HAVE

"Tubby" was a tradition. Although not liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot, he was universally admired. He was a constant inspiration, and his death is an irreparable loss. In that loss the student body has lost a master, he was universally admired. He liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot.

"Tubby" was a tradition. Although not liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot, he was universally admired. He was a constant inspiration, and his death is an irreparable loss. In that loss the student body has lost a master, he was universally admired. He liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot.

"Tubby" was a tradition. Although not liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot, he was universally admired. He was a constant inspiration, and his death is an irreparable loss. In that loss the student body has lost a master, he was universally admired. He liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot.

"Tubby" was a tradition. Although not liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot, he was universally admired. He was a constant inspiration, and his death is an irreparable loss. In that loss the student body has lost a master, he was universally admired. He liked by all, as is the fate of every school mascot.