Debatable Men

The following epithyle written by Judith Kinca, '41, and Serena Smith, ‘41, at the Hunter College Debate Team, has been published in the Boston University Debatable, Volume 7, Number 1.

I have a suspicion of the idea that the human race has been since the dawn of time divided into two classes: the men who do the talking and the women who do the listening.

I will therefore confine myself to the latter class. I will talk about women and their problems, and I will neglect the men and their problems.

I will talk about women and their problems, and I will neglect the men and their problems.

I will talk about women and their problems, and I will neglect the men and their problems.
