Post-War Plans To Be Studied At Technology
Professor MacLaurin To Direct Research
Aided By Graduates
While devoting a large portion of its unexcelled facilities to the job of meeting the exigencies of a war, Technology is nevertheless giving consideration to the problems which will follow a termination of the conflict.

A series of studies on the methods being employed by companies in long-range planning under the provisions of the post-war period are to be started soon by the Industrial Relations section of Technology. Professor Ralph E. Freeman, head of the department of economics and social sciences, announced last night.

Post-War Economy
In undertaking these studies, which will be carried out under the direction of Professor Freeman, the Machinists' Union of Chicago, an active and influential section of the American Federation of Labor, has given its consent to the conduct of the work.

The Technology of Tomorrow
The Machinists have been able to do so because of the progress of the post-war economy. Their leaders, who have given the Union much needed influence and an important mission, believe that the union movement has been strengthened by the war and that it will be able to advance the cause of labor in the field of post-war economy.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be based on the principles of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.

The union leaders have also been able to carry out their plans because of the support of the American Federation of Labor. The AFL has given the Machinists' Union much needed support and has encouraged the union to carry out its plans.

The union leaders believe that the post-war economy will be characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and equality. They believe that the machinists and their allies will be able to work together for the common good and to build a better future for all workers.