First Blackout
For Cambridge
Affects Tech Little

Last night between 10:00 P.M. and 10:30 P.M. Cambridge, and hence the Institute, experienced the first blackout since World War number II began. It was not noticed by some Technology students who are in a perpetual blackout.

As can be expected, the enforced darkness brought many peculiar things to light, including those heretofore never discussed inhibitions of the far famed Tech Morgatryd. From 10:00 until 10:30 The Tech news room was flooded with "frightened" womanhood (?), and it was all your correspondent could do to write his stories for this issue in the blackness keeping the fluting co-eds off his lap.

The dormitories, as usual, obeyed the rule "no women," to the letter. There was only one call for help from Goodale 405, when the peace in the dorm office was suddenly shattered by a frantic ringing of the telephone. Upon answering, Mr. Sheldon stated in an interview with The Tech, he could only make out some incoherent murmurings. Being,-very revealing.

The Tech office. When last contacted they were in a perpetual blackout.
